

Christine Accurso was born and raised in Southern California. She and her husband Aaron moved to Gilbert, Arizona with their 3 children, in 2007. Christine was the executive director of First Way Pregnancy Center, a local non-profit organization in Phoenix and was also the practice administrator of Morning Star OBGYN & Morning Star Pediatrics in Gilbert, all the while being a strong advocate for educational freedom for all children. One of her children was a recipient of Arizona's Empowerment Scholarship Account and the other two children benefited from tuition tax credits for their private schools. After rallying over a thousand families in leading a statewide effort to defend Arizona's newest school choice law (which was a huge success) the state's newly elected Superintendent of Public Instruction, Mr. Tom Horne appointed her to lead the nation's largest school choice program beginning in January of this year. Christine Accurso is now the executive director of the Empowerment Scholarship Account Program for the State of Arizona.
