

Ginger McMahan Bio

I was born in Colorado Springs, CO, and moved around until settling in Arlington Heights, IL, where I grew up and stayed until moving to Colorado for college.

I began my photography career while at Fort Lewis College in Durango, CO., during the 1980s. I graduated in 1985. I started with old-time photography, where I co-owned a studio in downtown Durango for a few years. With a move back to Illinois in 1987, I transitioned to portrait photography. I attended the Winona School of Professional Photography and, from there, worked as a studio manager for a full-service professional portrait photographer. Desiring to move back west after a photography seminar down the Colorado River, I decided to move to Prescott and open my own studio in 1992. I have had the privilege of telling the stories of many Prescott families for 31 years. The full-service studio was located on Hwy 89 for nearly ten years, and then I moved it to my home once I had children. I continue to work on a limited basis and am thrilled to have the opportunity to bring my passion for photography to RWOP.

I'm married to Bill, a home-care physical therapist, and together we have two daughters, ages 23 and 25. We love Prescott and enjoy all it offers!
